MASER Engineering, the technologically-leading failure and reliability testing center in Europe, and Eurofins Scientific, an international, renowned laboratory group, have entered into an agreement whereby Eurofins Scientific will acquire the shares of MASER Engineering BV. Current executive management will also participate via a minority shareholding.

MASER and Eurofins share a similar philosophy and complement each other perfectly. Together the two companies have big ambitions to grow the European market specifically in the semiconductor and electronic systems industry. The new ownership will also open up additional opportunities for MASER in the international market, particularly within the Eurofins Materials & Engineering Sciences Business line.

"We are very pleased that, a strong partner has been found who is technically innovative, sustainable and growth-oriented," explain Hans Kemper and Kees Revenberg, founders and former owners of MASER Engineering.

The Dutch operations of MASER will remain in place to continue to serve customers with the best service. MASER's trademarks of flexibility, delivery reliability and consistent responsiveness to customer needs will be further strengthened. The existing customer and supplier relationships will be continued and intensified.

Thijs Kempers, CEO of MASER, will ensure a smooth continuation of MASER after the acquisition and will continue in his role as CEO. "I am committed to creating continuity for both our customers and our employees and to opening up positive development opportunities for MASER's employees.
